Victory For the Written Law.

The verdict in the Hains trial will be widely accepted as substantial punishment, and it must stand as a reprimand for the doctrine of the unwritten law. The failure to convict Captain Hains' brother was an accomplishment in a previous trial was a surprise to the country. The nearest brother was especially cautious in his conduct throughout and in his cynical contempt for the exactions of law.

The idea of insanity put up by Captain Hains is a valid and proper defense against the accusation of murder. Its acceptance by a jury does not tend to encourage violent crimes. The slayer does not go untried, and there is none of the posing as a hero, which is a disgusting and dangerous sequel to acquittal by the unwritten law. Justice is too often outraged in this country by deeds of the kind for which Captain Hains will pay the penalty. The verdict is a triumph for the people and a vindication of the spirit of fairness, firmness and faithfulness in the lawful guardians of public order.

A world's court of peace such as was advocated at the Chicago congress may be much nearer than seemed possible a few years ago. Its powers at first would be merely advisory, but in time it could speak with an authority which no self-respecting nation would flout.

The late Augusta Jane Evans did not write as much fiction as her popular contemporary, Rev. E. P. Roe, but the output of her pen held in the south about the same place in literature that the indefatigable Hoe held in the north.

Those United States sailors who were arrested for walking on the grass in Boston Common shouldn't be discouraged. There's plenty of grass just as good with no police around looking for cheap glory.

Princess Juliana Louise Emma Marie Wilhelmina of Holland even has a grant to see fair play just like other lucky babies.

The peace party shouldn't make the mistake of calling off the war on flies, hoppers, the white plague and black handers.

Even in French there's nothing in a name when anarchism stalks forth as "syndicalism."

Agitating for a sane Fourth should also be done early.

Many a "joy ride" has a "grief walk" at the end of it.

Gliding Europe a Good Time.
For weeks past the European caterers to foreign tourists have been figuring on the season's prospect for gathering in American coin. On the holiday money dropped in the highways and byways by other nationalities the landlords, tradesmen, guides and showmen can live after the European fashion. Money from this country is velvet, and with that the general populace can count on a good time. It puts froth on the otherwise state beer of their humdrum existence.

American money will be welcomed on the continent this year. Trade is lagging the world over, and dealers in luxuries are glad to see the open pocketbook. Every dollar dropped works like the nimble shilling and circulates all along the line, from the spendthrift lord to the spendthrift valet and shoe-maker. The "easy come, easy go," habit is at home in European pleasure haunts. Americans especially pay richly for the good time they go so far to seek and spend good times over every point they touch.

The late Augusta Jane Evans was hailed by many as "the great American novelist" when her most popular book, "St. Elmo," appeared. That work is said to have held the sales record until "David Harum" displaced it. As a rule, "best sellers" are short stayers, but "St. Elmo" sold well for a generation and still finds admiring readers.

Green peas at 75 cents a peck and cucumbers at 15 cents each make town dwellers wonder why last year's potatoes and onions taste so good all of a sudden.

The St. Louis yarn about a rat that turns on the gas at night to suffocate folks may not be a nature fake, but anyway "Rats!"

Soldiers and sailors never fight unless civilians bring on war. Peace advocates should go hot footed after civilians who stir up strife.

If the wise old Martians are really looking at us they might take our signals to be a touch for a laugh.

Sort of leze majesty for the peace party not to recommend breadtroughs as makers for peace.

With Castro loose Venezuela is in no hurry to spring "homecoming week" on its exiles.

This uprightness of wheat is likely to put bread on the menu of the very rich.

The divine right of kings to "put by something for a rainy day" is challenged by the Young Turks. Perhaps this is where those noxious butt against the prejudices of rulers still on the job who have men and ships to do their bidding.

A recruiting boom has filled the ranks of the army, and it is said that there is much good timber for commissioned grades in the new material.

Nothing gained by knowing that "thought waves can stop war," since according to the new science they can start war too.

JACKSON, Ky., May 17 1909
EDITOR NEWS:

Trusting that you may deem the following word of admonition to the Democrats of this county worthy of space I make bold to offer this bit of advice to the party:

The Republicans have met and nominated their ticket, and while I do not think they are proud of it, nevertheless has some elements of strength that the Democrats would do well to consider—youth, energy and money.

The Democrats have met and called their precinct conventions and in the hands of the sturdy yeomanry of the Democratic party lies the future of Breathitt county. In their judgment in selecting their nominees for the various county offices depends the success of the ticket in November.

Since the foundation of this republic, since the origin of free government, the Democratic principles have wielded the greatest influence for good that has been known, it has stood as the only bulwark between the grasping avariciousness of predatory wealth and the humble tiller. Whether in success or defeat it will always stand as a menace to wrong and corruption. It can never die—good can never be destroyed.

And throughout all the history of the party its only defeats has been accomplished by the selfishness and self-seeking efforts of some members of the party. The spirit of rule-or-ruin on the part of its leaders has been the cause of its every defeat. The people have never lost confidence in the principles of the party—it has been only a lack of confidence in the leaders.

Now in Breathitt county what is it that the people want? Is it the personal advancement of the individuals, or a few few individuals, or is it good, clean, economical administration of the county affairs coupled with the rigid enforcement of the laws? I believe that practically all of the citizenship of the county, regardless of party affiliations want the law enforced and economical administration of the county's business. Granted that this is true what are the people expecting of the Democrats in the selection of nominees for county officers? The Republicans will certainly not make the fight this fall depending on the morality of their ticket. As J. C. Lykins says, "I can't be did. Their chief aim will be the law, they can put up to corrupt the suffrage of the voters."

The eyes of patriotic citizens of the county are fixed with anxious gaze upon a result of the Democratic convention which meets finally here on June 21. The question of putting in will be a question of life and death to the party. You feel, low Democrats will have to answer that query.

And here as a Democrat who seeks no performance, who has nothing save the good of the county at heart, lets have a heart-to-heart talk about what the result should be, and what it may be if you do not act with wisdom. Be you an office seeker, are you interested enough in Democratic success—which means the best for the county—to put the party's good above your own self interest? If our then there is no trouble. Taking it for granted that all who will aspire for the various nominations are worthy, are you willing to yield gracefully and willingly if some other man who aspires for the same place would add greater strength to the ticket? Are you willing to make a personal sacrifice for the good of the party? Neighbor, friend, relative should not influence you in the selection of our candidates. Let the only motive that guides you be the desire to see good men, strong men, men eminently qualified, made the nominees. Let's put up a ticket that will command the respect and confidence of ALL men. Contrast is sometimes very effective.

Deplorable as the fact is, money has much to do with the result of elections these days. Frequently—yes, in a majority of instances—money thwarts the will of the people and foists upon them men, parties, administrations that is not the choice of the majority. One of the claims for the adherents of the recently nominated Republican county ticket is they are able and willing and ready to put up such a corruption fund in this county that almost staggers the mind of thinking men. It is claimed that from $20,000 to $25,000 will be put up by them. Whether this be true or false it is well known that the selection of that ticket was made largely upon the ability of the nominees to put up a large amount of money.

The Democrats should be no personal feeling actuate them when they go to their district meetings. They should weigh carefully the character and strength of the men to be nominated. They should let no petty prejudices control them. If the Democrats of each precinct would meet and elect good, honest, clear-headed and patriotic men for delegates, send the delegates up uninstructed and let the delegates get together at the County Convention and discuss dispassionately the various candidates and name a good clean ticket the battle will then have been won, but if there is dissension, strife and bickerings in which both the good of the county and the party is lost sight of, it is then very questionable whether success is possible, for, remember, brother Democrat, the contrast has to be decided before even an independent Republican will vote for a good Democrat in preference to a bad Republican. More is expected of Democracy than Republicanism.

Let all your discussion be for the good of the party instead of the advancement of a friend's personal interests.

Respectfully,
A DEMOCRAT.

IT'S NOT WORTH WHILE

It's not worth while—the fretting,
The sighing and the weeping,
Best to spend your time forgetting
Your troubles as they go.
Best look ahead for laughter
And take no time for tears—
The sunny days hereafter
Will make the golden years.

It's not worth while—the grieving
About the chances lost;
What gain are you receiving
The while you count the cost?
Forget them, O, forget them!
Look on ahead and smile.
The blue days, though you've met them,
Are none of them worth while.

It's not worth while—the whining
When things are going wrong;
The mourning and the repining—
Mix the sunshine with your song!
Come, shake the shades of sadness
And chase the dream of gloom—
Your heart beats time for gladness,
So give it lots of room.

Helpful Hints.
Amos Koster writes: "Please suggest some new and unique line of work for a young man who is ambitious to rise quickly."

Dear Amos, we approach your query with a thrill of the heart. If there is anything or anybody we like to see, it is a young man who is so full of ambition that he can't wait. And a young man who is so ambitious to rise quickly that he desires to take the elevator to the nineteenth floor and begin at the top as a janitor, or something on that order, gets a wave of understanding from our mental economy. So many young men of the present day want to rise quickly, but lack ambition. They prefer the dynamite-explosion route to success. They want to go up and don't care a hang about the possibilities of coming down like X, Y & Z, stuck on a rumor that the assistant treasurer of the Bland Trust Company has packed his suitcase.

Amos, the most favorable occupation for a young man who wants to do the buck-wheat-flour act just now is ballooning. No other business permits a man to rise rapidly and see the country. To be a balloonist, you should obtain some 40,000 yards of varnished silk, and have some kind of a reel sew it into a receptacle the shape of a barrel, with the little end lashed off. Then hitch a large basket to the bottom, jolly the gas company for a few minutes, insert a gas pipe into the bag, wait until it has swelled up like a man who has been nominated for the presidency, and then climb aboard.

Before sailing, compose a number of magazine articles, tell the newspapers how to spell your name, and let her go.

Pick a landing spot in some state where you are attachment-proof, and your future is assured.

FOR YOUR HEALTH'S SAKE

WINNING THE FIGHT.

The cause of consumption is well known. The manner in which it is transmitted is well understood. Methods of care and treatment are also well formulated and recognized by physicians and sanitarians generally. Statisticians have given us its history and told us about its terrible ravages and have demonstrated its cost in dollars and cents of the nation. The work of education and prevention must be carried on. It only remains for the people to insist that health bodies be supplied with funds and equipment to push the work which has been so promisingly begun.

"It's awfully late," I remarked to my friend after an extra long whistle at the club. "What will you say to your wife?"

"Oh, I shan't say much, you know," was the reply. "Good morning, dear, or something of that sort. She'll say the rest."

The Man From Home

A Novelization of the Play of the Same Name

Copyright, 1909, by American Press Association

By BOOTH TARKINGTON and HARRY LEON WILSON

This romance deals with a curious admixture of American plainness and European high life; with a young Indiana girl dazzled by a title and in the clutches of a quartet of sharpers headed by an impecunious British peer; with the girl's Anglomanic brother, a Russian noble in disguise, an escaped Russian convict and a faithless wife, and most important of all, with the girl's shrewd, witty, courageous, resourceful guardian, Daniel Voorhees Pike of Kokomo. Daniel loves the Indiana girl and is determined to save her from the sharpers even against her own will. Read and you will learn how Daniel, with but a single friend to aid him, faced a most difficult dilemma and why he figured so prominently in an international romance in which heraldry was more important than hearts and cupid.

CHAPTER I

"It's a girl!"

His feet on the desk of the office in the Central bank building, the gaunt young man with the stern features and the kindly gray eyes that always seemed a perpetual rebuke to the face in which they were set, contemplated the letter he held in his hand. His back was to the door—a half glass door which was also the main and only entrance to the room and which bore upon its translucent surface in ragged letters, worn by the polishing the glass had undergone, the words, "Daniel Voorhees Pike, Attorney at Law."

He looked with startled eyes into the kindly blue ones that glimmered into his own. "A girl!" he seemed to hear the boy say. "A little girl, Mr. Shupson?" In his fancy he saw the big man nod, saw him place the pipe back in his teeth and extend his two palms until they were a foot or so apart. "A girl, Dan," he heard, "but so long, Dan, and purtier than all get out. And she's got to be a big responsibility, my boy. We'll have to sell a heap of lots to pay what she's going to cost, Dan—a whole heap of lots."

And gradually the picture seemed to fade away, and, like a dissolving view, its place was taken by another—the picture of a half timbered house that stood back among some trees at the corner of Main and Center streets. He could see the worn steps leading up to the veranda and himself approaching half fearfully along the gravel walk that led in from the rusty gate. On the veranda sat the big man with the heavy features and the corned pipe, and he heard the voice again bidding him come up. And then there was a call to some one within, and a woman emerged with a white bundle in her arms. "Show her to Dan," he heard the man's voice say, and then, when the woman had removed a bit of the daisied covering from the little face and he had looked upon it, started, gasped and, marvelling at the beauty of the child, he turned to the man who stood by the door. "She's going to be Ethel, Dan, that bundle of infancy. And maybe some of these days she'll be getting herself in a tight place, and it's going to be up to you, Dan, to help her out, and you're going to promise me that you'll do it, boy. Because, the other kid, he'll grow up maybe to have sense, and he'll look out for himself, but it's a tough place for girls, Dan—a mighty tough place."

He could almost hear the hushed voice in which the boy had given the required promise and the awe with which he heard that the newest atom of humanity to arrive was already motherless, and then the picture faded again. Then came a succession of similar views. He saw the dingy real estate office grow into a respectable brick building, and then into a handsome stone edifice, and the heavy featured man turn grayer and grayer and more somber and more hardworking, and he could remember the day when the tiny Ethel was brought to the office for the first time and of the manner in which she began to grow up. He recalled the day when she reached the mature age of twelve and of how he had presented to her a Bible for a gift and of the manner in which he had blushed for all his twenty-five years.

And then he recalled the day when John Shupson had contended to him that the "kids" were to be given advantages and were to be sent abroad to school. There came a blank after that, but he recalled as if it had been but yesterday the feeling with which he had gone off into a corner and wrestled with the grief that had beset him. He could even see the fluttering hand that waved to him from the car window as the train took her and her brother away.

Suddenly the door behind him opened and, shut quickly, and quick steps caused him to drop his feet to the floor. He turned and found a visitor at his elbow. "Dan," said the newcomer, "it's all yours. Jenkins just got a telegram that the K. and G. has decided to offer you the representation for this end of the state."

"Of course it's so, man!" replied the other, shaking him vigorously by the shoulder. "Wake up, can't you? It's worth fifteen thousand a year to you!" Pike turned quizzical eyes upon his friend and folded the letter he held in his hand. "Much obliged to you, Tom," he said. "I guess I'm kind of upset today. Got a letter here that—jotted me a little. I'm thinking of going away for a spell. Going away?" ejaculated his friend with wide eyes. "Going away? Where?" "I guess I'll take a trip across the water," replied Pike dreamily. "All ways wanted to see those foreign parts, those Venices and Romes and Londons. Must be a queer tribe over there, Tom. Not much like us plain folks here, eh? Lots of high and mighty dukes and earls and things and counts of arms and crowns and coaches with white horses, eh?" "Tom Perkins sat down in a chair with a gasp of astonishment. He stared at his friend with frank amazement written on his face and opened his mouth twice before his lips formed the words. "Europe?" he said at last. "Europe," he replied. "Say, Tom, you remember Jim Cooley? They sent him over there, didn't they? Made him vice consul or something over in London? I'd maybe get a chance to see Jim and talk to him about—about old times."

His voice died down, and he regarded the man who stood by the door. "Never happened to hear of folks over there of the name of—of Hawcastle, did you, Tom?" he went on. "I don't know what sort of business they are in, but I guess they're well to do. Never happened to hear of them, eh?" Perkins shook his head, and Pike went on: "Maybe I'll write to Jim Cooley and ask him about these people. Jim'd be likely to know 'em, I guess. Vice consul must be a pretty big bug over there."

"Law case?" asked Perkins suddenly. "Sort of," answered Pike quietly. "I don't know that I'd call it just that. Perhaps the trip would be a change anyway. And I'd like to see this man Hawcastle."

"Where does this Hawcastle live?" asked Perkins. "England. Got a house he calls Hawcastle Hall."

"What about the K. and G.?" asked Perkins suddenly. "I guess the K. and G. will have to wait awhile."

Perkins stood up resolutely and faced his friend. "There's something wrong with you, Dan," he said emphatically. "There's something mighty wrong. It ain't like you to go running off this way unless there's something behind it."

He stepped, for Pike was whistling softly to himself, whistling like the man who is striving to recall some time that is only half forgotten. Then he turned to Perkins. "Remember that old time, Tom," he asked. "Sweet Genevieve?"

"Get out!" snapped Perkins. "That's a million years old. Why don't you keep up to date if you're going in for music? What do you care about Sweet Genevieve, anyway?"

"I used to know somebody that sang it once—long ago," said Pike quietly. "I used to hear John Shupson whistle it years before he died and left all that money to me for those two kids Tom." He turned suddenly and, fixing his friend with an accusatory finger—"What would you think of a furman that doesn't guard?" Perkins regarded him rebelliously. "Depends on whose guardian he is."

and marry and settle down? Tell me that!" Pike smiled queerly, and his head seemed to strike into his shoulders a trifle as he thrust his hands into his pockets. "I guess she's going to marry and settle down, Tom, all right," he said slowly. "From what I hear she's going to marry one of those dukes or earls I was mentioning."

"Marry a foreigner?" asked Perkins, jumping to his feet. "Why, I thought she—"

"Never mind what you thought, Tom," returned Pike. "I'm telling you she's going to be married. That's why I guess she won't be likely to come back to Kokomo. I guess Kokomo's a pretty poor looking place after some of those other places she's been seeing."

"How do you know?" asked Perkins, drawing his chair forward. "Pike lifted the letter he had folded up. 'I got this from her,' he said simply. 'Want to know what's in it?'"

"Yes," answered Perkins. "I can't let you read it, but it's from a place in Italy—Sorrento. He went on slowly, mouthing the unfamiliar word. 'She says she's going to marry the Hon. Almeric St. Aubyn, heir to the ancient house of Hawcastle. And she wants to make a settlement on him. She can't marry without my consent, you know, Tom. If she does the money goes to the Kokomo Orphan asylum.'"

"Going to give your consent?" inquired Perkins. "Don't know," answered Pike. "I've got to look the young man over first. I promised John Shupson I'd always look after her. That was when she dash and dropped his chin into his hand. It may have been an hour that he sat there, and in that time never a thought of his legal business crossed his mind. He was busy with a fanciful picture of an unknown city that in spite of his desire seemed to take on the aspects of a larger Kokomo, and in his fancy he could see a big, well knit young fellow leaning eagerly over to look into the face of a girl, and he heard her call him Almeric.

"Must be a mighty fine man," he mused—"a fine big man—to capture her."

Then he laid it face down upon the desk and dropped his chin into his hand. It may have been an hour that he sat there, and in that time never a thought of his legal business crossed his mind. He was busy with a fanciful picture of an unknown city that in spite of his desire seemed to take on the aspects of a larger Kokomo, and in his fancy he could see a big, well knit young fellow leaning eagerly over to look into the face of a girl, and he heard her call him Almeric.

"Must be a mighty fine man," he mused—"a fine big man—to capture her."

Then Perkins came in to ask if Pike wished to sail from New York to Havre in two days' time, stating that it would be necessary to leave that night if Pike wished to take passage on her.

"I'll go, Tom," he said. "Maybe you'll drop in here once in awhile and tell folks that ask for me that I'll be back in a month or so."

Then he sat down and wrote to Jim Cooley at London.

At 8 that night he stepped aboard an east-bound train and the next afternoon was in New York. Sorrento seemed a long way off, and it was with a heavy heart that he walked up the gangplank of La Provence.

When Harvard was young, Harvard, the first college, founded in 1636, continued for more than fifty years to be the only college. It was established by vote of the general court of Massachusetts Bay, which agreed to give £400 toward its endowment. Two years later this endowment was more than doubled by the bequest of John Harvard, who left half of his property and his entire library of 300 volumes to the college. The conditions of admission were few. To matriculate it was necessary to know "so much Latin as was sufficient to understand Daily or any classical author and to meter and speak true Latin in prose and verse." The student was required "to be able to decline the paradigms of Greek nouns and verbs." Each class was also required to study theology in a form probably not unlike that of the Westminster catechism. Scraps Book.

Everybody is likely to have kidney and bladder trouble. In fact nearly everybody has some trouble of this kind. That is the reason why you so often have pains in the back and groin, scalding sensation, urinary disorders, etc.—that's your kidneys. The last thing to do is to get some of Dr. Witt's Kidney and Bladder Pills right away. Take them for a few days or a week or so and you will feel all right. In this way, too, you will ward off dangerous and possible serious ailments. They are perfectly harmless, and are not only antiseptic, but they also quickly by their healing properties. Why Do Seals Swallow Stones? No nature student seems yet to have discovered for what reason seals swallow stones, though the fact is a well established one. Certainly the stones are not taken in for ballast, for the empty seals keep down as easily as the others. They are not swallowed for the purpose of grinding up food for they are found in the stomachs of nursing pups. They are not taken in with the food because they are found in the stomachs of both young seals and in those that live in the open sea and feed on squid. Yet it is evident that these things are not swallowed haphazard, but are selected with considerable care from the articles strewn along the shore, and that a preference is exhibited for rounded objects. This is shown by the fact that, as a rule, only articles of one kind are found in any one seal's stomach.

An Insulting Pronoun. The ritual of society, as women make it, is very exciting the world over, even in almshouses. The London Outlook reports a serious trouble among a set of workhouse officials. The infirmiry nurses, three in number, had demanded a separate sitting room and the delight of Sunday dinner therein, and the matron had sought to humiliate them by sending the cook to enjoy her Sunday dinner in their company. The brawny cook described what occurred as follows: "Well, Nurse Bink, she come down and got inside the door. 'Four covers?' she says. 'Four? Who's the fourth?' 'Me,' says I. 'You?' she says, and with that she tosses her head and walks away."

Here cook drew a long breath, then continued, "If it hadn't a been Sunday, gentlemen, I should have let her have it for calling me 'you'!"

While Kodol is doing this, the stomach is resting—and becoming strong and healthy. A strong and healthy stomach guarantees a sound and active brain. The man with a sound stomach—stomach that is doing for the body just what Nature intended it to do—is the man who is always prepared for any emergency. He is "there with the goods."

The man with a sick stomach, is a man sick all over. When the stomach is irritated by indigestion, the blood and heart are directly affected. Then dizziness, unnatural sleepiness, sick-headaches, vertigo and fainting spells, and even serious brain trouble develop. Kodol will prevent these.

Spurring the stomach and brain to special effort by "tonics" and "stimulants" doesn't cure anything, or accomplish any good. Neither does dieting. Indigestion and the serious ailments which it induces can be averted and corrected only by natural means. Kodol supplies this natural means. It performs the stomach's work for it—just as the stomach should perform it—while the stomach takes a little rest, "for the stomach's sake."

Our Guarantee—Go to your druggist today and get a dollar bottle. Then after you have used the entire contents of the bottle if you can honestly say that it has not done you any good, return the bottle to the druggist. He will refund your money without question or delay. We will then pay the druggist for the bottle. Don't hesitate. All druggists know that our guarantee is good. This offer applies to the large bottle only and to but one in a family. The large bottle contains 24 times as much as the fifty cent bottle. Kodol is prepared at the laboratories of E. C.
